

was suffering from angina before he was interrogated and I think it would be hard to show

- a). that it was wise to proceed with the interrogation, and
- b). that the interrogation did not have the effect of worsening his angina.

With regard to his other psychiatric symptoms, I think that one will probably have to regard them as being the result of the so-called 'deep interrogation' procedures.

Denis Leigh, M.D., F.R.C.P.
The Bethlem Royal and the Maudsley
Hospitals.

---

20th June, 1975.

P.S. I read on my return journey from Norway on Monday, the 9th of June that Mr. McKenna had been buried on Sunday, the 8th of June, and I imagine that his death was the result of an acute cardiac failure. His death was not unexpected and as will be seen I had advised the man to consult his family doctor for his heart condition, so that he could obtain more adequate treatment, for, if what he told me was true about his medication, then he did not seem to be receiving adequate medication, although I have no objective information regarding his medical treatment.